New Xulon Title Incites Readers to Operate in the Fullness of Christ
Bodlander adamantly focuses on presenting God's will: committed discipleship

MAITLAND, FL— Ron Bodlander's new book, God's Arithmetic ($24.99, paperback, 978-1-62419-016-2; $9.99, e-book, 978-1-62419-017-9) sets forth the fundamental spiritual principles God desires to teach believers to learn to become productive citizens of His Kingdom. The author is quick in expressing that his book has nothing to do with actual mathematics; but rather the basic 'math' necessary to successful daily living, as God's Word defines success.

"The intention is to make an appeal to believers in Christ who possess a hunger to grow spiritually," states the author. "My desire is that these believers will arrive at a deeper, more mature understanding of what it means to follow Jesus Christ in a world that largely does not."

Ron Bodlander has a bachelor's degree with a Bible major, and holds a Masters of Divinity degree from a prominent theological seminary. He has been a Bible teacher and discipleship leader for almost forty years. The author has also served as a youth minister and a Pastor, in addition to a wide variety of behind the scenes experience in church administration. His twenty-three years of experience in working with needy families through state government has given him unique insight into how God's power can impact the human condition.

Xulon Press, a division of Salem Communications, is the world's largest Christian self-publisher, with more than 8,000 titles published to date. Retailers may order God's Arithmetic through Ingram Book Company and/or Spring Arbor Book Distributors. The book is available online through xulonpress.com/bookstore, amazon.com, and barnesandnoble.com.
